

NEW BOOKS

The Life Everlasting.

By Marie Corelli.

In this, Marie Corelli's latest book, the author writes along the same lines that brought her fame in her first book, "The Romance of Two Worlds."

It is a cruise into the realm beyond this material world and tells of strange love affairs of both mortal and immortal passion, propounding queer conjectures of the cause of life and death.

The book is a story of spiritual adventure, written in a sincere and convincing manner, and with that poetic passion and scientific logic of which Marie Corelli is so complete a master.

The Secret Garden.

By Frances Hodgson Burnett.

Children who have read and re-read "Little Lord Fauntleroy" will be delighted with this splendid story by the same author.

It is an English story of outdoor life.

The story itself is beautiful and inspiring. There is mystery in it, and magic—the magic of love, unselfishness and thoughtfulness of others.

The Secret Garden is charming and opens its gates, not only to children, but to all who are interested in and love the little ones.

The Truth About An Author.

By Arnold Bennett.

In the literary field today Arnold Bennett ranks high and this little volume of his early experiences is written with the same ruthless realism which has brought him into prominence as a novelist.

This was originally published in England, anonymously, but has been rewritten and acknowledged to be autobiographical.

The book is unique—a humorous and audacious confession of the hidden conditions which govern the contemporary literary career.

Mr. Bennett is to visit this country the last of the month and will be more or less prominent in our literary circles.

Rose of Old Harpeth.

By Maria Thompson Daviess.

Another story of peace and happiness on the old "Road to Providence" in the quiet Tennessee valley.

Rose Mary is a strong, healthy, young woman, who performs the homely, everyday duties that fall to her lot, cheerfully and lovingly. She is the chief manager and sunshine maker in the home, looking after comfort of an old uncle, two aunts and a young cousin.

The book is full of kindly gossip, portraying the life of a country village. Readers of "Miss Selina Lou" and "The Road to Providence" will welcome this new book written along the same line.

Grandmother.

By Fromam Mathews.

A tale of Old Kentucky.

Grandmother, at the death of her husband, goes back to Old Kentucky to make her home with her married daughter. Both the daughter and her husband die within a year and Grandmother is the guardian of three little ones.

Heredity, religion, environment and spiritual affinity are all interwoven into a well-told narrative, that makes interesting reading from beginning to end.

"Grandmother" has an educational influence, intellectually, religiously and socially and will aid in developing a high standard of living.

When Margaret Was a Freshman.

By Elizabeth Hollister Hunt.

As the title implies, this is the story of a girl's first year in college.

Margaret is an unselfish, fun loving girl and popular with her school mates. How she learned to work and play is told in a charming manner.

A splendid book for young people. Published by Moffat Yard & Co., New York. Price $1.25 net.

The Little Rebel.

By Edward Peple.

It was in the "war time" in the year 1865, when the South realized that she would have to give up.

Twenty miles from Richmond lay an old plantation, its fences, fields and all surroundings telling of neglect and decay.

In an old two room cabin we find a thin, worn, man, clad in ragged gray, searching for his tiny daughter, who comes in with her berries and acorns.

It is a pathetic story, touchingly told, a story of patriotism and heroism of the highest type.

A dainty little gift book bound in gray and gold, well printed on good paper, every page outlined with a dainty border.

The book is dedicated to the memory of General R. E. Lee.

Chatterbox.

We received with pleasure a copy of Chatterbox for 1911. It is an old and favorite friend. Upon examination we found it just as good, if not a little better, than it has been in years past.

It is a source of instruction as well as a pleasant pastime. The children will be delighted with it.

A Narrow Escape.

A horse ridden by Perry Hays the rural mail carrier took fright at an automobile near the Post Office corner last Monday and became unmanageable. In the effort to manage the frightened animal (the reins broke and all Mr. Hays could do was to keep his seat as best he could to save himself from a bad fall. The horse ran or rather plunged to the corner of Wade & Dawson's hardware store and in getting onto the granitoid walk fell and in falling struck Mrs. Mamie Fields, who was passing at that moment, knocking her down and quite severely bruising her. Dr. Turner was called and pronounced the injuries painful but not necessarily dangerous. Eye witnesses declare it was a miraculous escape and that Mrs. Fields was exceedingly lucky to escape as well as she did.

Mitchell and Ennis, of Shelbyville close the sale Saturday, of C. F. Martyn's farm near Clapper to Illinois parties. The farm contains 172 acres and sold at $100 per acre. Mr. Martyn bought this farm five years ago and has made enough off of the farm in that time to pay for it. Possession will be given in 30 days. Mr. Martyn has not decided where he will locate but we hope he will finally decide to remain among us.

Miss Pearl Moss, of Woodland accidentally burned one of her eyes with a curling iron one day last week and for a time it was feared the sight of the eye would be injured, but at last accounts the injured optic was doing well.

W. M. Hicks the apple man left Tuesday for Quincy where he will meet J. W. Williamson and together they will proceed to St. Joseph where they will begin picking and barreling apples in the big orchard of Dr. Woodson. This crop of apples was bought by the Milburn Produce Co. of Chicago for $100,000 and we are anxious to know just how many barrels of apples this orchard produced this year.

A freak of nature, a snow-white quail, can be seen on the farm of B. F. Goslin, near Hinton. It is one of a covey of birds that were hatched last spring and are now almost grown. It is believed in the neighborhood that a white pigeon mated with the mother quail and produced this rare avian. —Herald.

S. D. Yates is conducting a general repair pair shop and agency for wind mills and gasoline engines at Stoutsville. Mr. Yates is prepared to furnish or repair most any kind of wind mill or light engines and we cheerfully recommend him to the good people of Stoutsville.

B. F. Fugate has bought the Eagan mills in this city and taken possession. Mr. Fugate is a thorough business man and is supplying the public with all kinds of meal and ground feed.

Drag the roads.

Norman E. Mack chairman of the Democratic National Committee says: The battle next year for which everybody is preparing must be fought largely on the magnificent record of the Democratic house of which Champ Clark is speaker and in the shaping of whose policies his has been the predominant influence. Small wonder therefore that his name stands high in the list of the Democratic presidential possibilities. The logic of the event has placed him here for since he has made and is making the record on which we must appeal to the country, it is but logical that he should loom largely on the horizon as a strong presidential possibility.

Shut Her Off.

"Now, that you've heard my daughter sing, what would you advise me to do?"

"Well," the music teacher replied, "I hardly know. Don't you suppose you could get her interested in settlement work or horseback riding, or something like that."

A Los Angeles school teacher advocates sleep periods between recitations for her pupils. She claims these sleep or rest periods help those with weak eyes and prevents good eyes from being injured from over taxing. We know several boys who would hail with joy such a plan. In fact so far as the writer knows boys have known the benefits of such a plan and put it into practice for many years and wondered why those old foggy teachers didn't understand it.

Fear of the Gang.

The mother of the 10-year-old slayer of Edward Lamb pleads in extenuation of his act that the "Coleman street" gang hounded him and made life miserable for him.

In these piping times of peace, when the persons of men and women are protected by law and by a vital public opinion, it is difficult to realize the realm of terror in which many a child dwells who brushes past us on the street. The early settler in Wyoming lived in hourly fear of Cheyennes, Arapahoes or Sioux. He was not safe when he went to the corral to feed his horse, or brought a bucket of water from the well. Many a nervous child in like fear of the "gang." The shadow of it never leaves him. It dogs his way to school and darkens all the streets and alleys near his home. His actual danger is usually slight, but that fact is negligible. Childish imaginations are vivid, and thirty minutes a week of actual attention from "the gang" is enough to make his life continuously miserable.

It is just as important to society that children should come and go without fear of other children as that adults should be free of the terror of other adults.—Republic.

BERT BULL
Monroe City.

There is some one who would rather have your picture than any other gift in the world, just as there are loved ones in your family of whom you have no photograph, but greatly desire one. You owe it to your family—to your friends—to have that photograph taken now. We endeavor to give to each portrait that individuality so necessary to the finished picture—one that is artistic, yet natural.
